

From Hilary Powell

I have had many years' association with the DMJs and have selected this little memory of a fairly unsung heroine, whose input to our lives at Rydes Hill was immeasurable.

My four years as a teacher at Rydes Hill School in Guildford were happy and memorable for many reasons. However one person in particular was a real influence in our lives. This was Sr. Malachy.

As an army is reputed to march 'on its stomach' so Sr. Malachy, in charge of the catering for staff and pupils, gave us, with her assistants, truly wonderful lunches, cakes and other delicacies which sustained us through our working days. She was very much a 'background' figure, always smiling and cheerful in her kitchen domain, but so important at keeping our 'army' marching and greatly valued by us all.
